

PIGEON AARAKOCRA

At first they were overlooked and ignored, just another part of life in a major city many citizens thought. At first these Aarakocra were just like any other visitors traveling through or looking for work, not worth a second thought or care in the world. Over a small period of time there numbers grew rapidly and it seemed to be hundreds of them in just a few months. On rooftops, abandoned buildings, scavenging materials and food these avians were here to stay and couldn't be overlooked now. Out of ignorance some were quick to hurl slurs at them forbidding their kind from certain streets, buildings or districts. Naturally gifted, talented fliers that have a strong commitment to the flock those that take the time to learn to live beside the Pigeon Aarakocra will quickly learn of the potential each and every one of these avians carries.

ONE BIRD, MANY POSSIBILITIES

Out in the world bards have told legendary stories of Pigeon Aarakocra flying at high speeds to bring messages that have saved lives able to out maneuver attacking griffons, ballista fire and hazardous weather conditions. These stories make for great entertainment but because of a pigeons diverse and natural skills many of these stories have a element of truth to them. Most Pigeon Aarakocra are aware most of their talents come from their flock lineage making cross flock rivalry a common practice between Pigeons but it will never turn violent. Most pigeons are always on the lookout for things that can be taken back to the flock either be food or materials for a nest, if need be a pigeon will help another regardless of the flock or nest he or she may be from.

Natural talents aside the Pigeon Aarakocra is highly perceptive able to navigate using man made landmarks and natural phenomena. This makes them excellent scouts, rangers or even simple messengers if employed as one. From the skies to the ground a Pigeon is always alert for danger, resources that can be of use or a chance to find something valuable to themselves or the flock.
